

Discernment Counseling Disclosures

1. Discernment counseling is not a legal service and no legal advice is provided. Please consult with an attorney or visit a court self-help center in your county if you have questions about the legal issues related to divorce.
2. Participation in discernment counseling does not relieve you from any obligations you may have in an ongoing divorce case.
3. By participating in discernment counseling, you agree that you will not seek to use in a court proceeding any statements made by the other party or by the counselor at any discernment counseling session. You also agree that you will not call as witness or seek to obtain for court purposes any of the notes or documents prepared by the discernment counselor.
4. Any information you provide will remain confidential. However, in order to provide effective service, if a referral is made to an outside professional, you hereby grant permission to share client information with that professional.
